Extract of a letter from Thomas Jefferson to Major Cartwright, dated Monticello, June 5, 1824.

Virginia, of which I am myself a native and resident, was not only the first of the States, but, I believe I may say, the first of the Nations of the earth, which assembled its wise men peaceably together to form a fundamental constitution, to commit it to writing, and place it among their archives, where every one should be free to appeal to its text. But this act was very imperfect: the other States, as they proceeded successively to the same work, made successive improvements; and, several of them, still further corrected by experience, have, by conventions, still further amended their first forms. My own State has gone on so far with its premiere ebauche, but it is now proposing to call a convention for amendment. Among other improvements, I hope they will adopt the subdivisions of our counties into wards: the former may be estimated at an average of twenty-four miles square; the latter should be six miles square each, and would answer to the hundreds of your Saxon Alfred. In each of these might be, 1. an elementary school; 2. a company of militia, with its officers; 3. a justice of the peace and a constable; 4. each ward should take care of their own poor; 5. of their own roads; 6. their own police; 7. elect, within themselves, one or more jurors to attend the courts of justice; 8. and here give in, at their folk-house, their votes for all functionaries reserved to their election. Each ward would thus be a small Republic

Virginia, of which I am myself a native and resident, was not only the first of the States, but, I believe I may say, the first of the Nations of the earth, which assembled its wise men peaceably together to form a fundamental constitution, to commit it to writing, and place it among their archives, where every one should be free to appeal to its text. But this act was very imperfect: the other States, as they proceeded successively to the same work, made successive improvements; and, several of them, still further corrected by experience, have, by conventions, still further amended their first forms. My own State has gone on so far with its premiere ebauche, but it is now proposing to call a convention for amendment. Among other improvements, I hope they will adopt the subdivisions of our counties into wards: the former may be estimated at an average of twenty-four miles square; the latter should be six miles square each, and would answer to the hundreds of your Saxon Alfred. In each of these might be, 1. an elementary school; 2. a company of militia, with its officers; 3. a justice of the peace and a constable; 4. each ward should take care of their own poor; 5. of their own roads; 6. their own police; 7. elect, within themselves, one or more jurors to attend the courts of justice; 8. and here give in, at their folk-house, their votes for all functionaries reserved to their election. The constitutions of most of our States assert, that all power is inherent in the People; that they may exercise it by themselves, in all cases to which they think themselves competent, (as in electing their functionaries, executive and legislative, and deciding by a jury of themselves both fact and law, in all judiciary cases in which any fact is involved,) or they may act by representatives, freely and equally chosen; that it is their right and duty to be, at all times, armed; that they are entitled to freedom of person, freedom of religion, freedom of property, and freedom of the press. In the structure of our legislatures, we think experience has proved the benefit of subjecting questions to two separate bodies of deliberants; but, in constituting these, natural right has been mistaken; some making one of these bodies, and some both, the representatives of property instead of persons, whereas the double deliberation might be as well obtained without any violation of true principle, either by requiring a greater age in one of the bodies, or by electing a proper number of representatives of persons, dividing them by lot into two chambers, and renewing the division at frequent intervals, in order to break up cabals. Virginia, of which I am myself a native and a resident, was not only the first of the States, but, I believe I may say, the first of the Nations of the earth, which assembled its wise men peaceably together to form a fundamental constitution, to commit it to writing, and place it among their archives, where
